New York Stock Market

NEW YORK, September 10.—The annals of the New York Stock Exchange show no parallel for the action of the market to-day, following the death of E. H. Harriman. There have been instances where due preparation in anticipation of the death of an important capitalist has absorbed the stock so far as to minimize its had effects on the stock market, while in other cases demoralization has followed, as on the sudden death of the late ex-Governor Flower in the midst of his conduct of a violent speculation. But for to-day's excited upshoot of prices, there is no parallel.

Some of the principal reasons for the movement are not obscure, although the observers yesterday who predicted a rise in prices to-day were frankly regarded as extremists. The principal reasons in the violent advance in prices and the acutest sufferers undoubtedly were those who had presumed to sell stocks short on the assumption that holders of shares in the Harriman properties would rush them to sale at a saorified when Mr. Harriman's death occurred. Some of this class persisted in this view to the extent of making short sales of these stocks, when they saw a buoyant rise at the opening of the New York stock market this morning. Their supposition was that this advance had been brought about by artificial measures to reassure sentiment and facilitate further liquidating sales. These short solers became convinced before the first hour of the market was over that the resistance shown by prices was too strong to overcome. winced before the first hour of the lack labor must soon add to retail purchases, which now expand slowly.

Retailers are numerous in the dry goods market, but purchasers are conservative, following the government report on the cotton crop, prices in the primary markets steadled perceptibly, and the position is now regarded as strong, although business is of moderate proportions. Converters are closing up outstanding trades, and printers using wide cloths have shown more interest in covering for future needs. Cotton yarns are steadler, with a light business offering and with complaints made by knitters of slow deliva light business offering and with com-plaints made by knitters of slow deliv-cries on old contracts. In men's wear some of the smaller mills complain of excessive cancellations, but the large corporations are well occupied. New business in footwear is still held in check by the price situation.
